When I installed windows 7 it only recognised 5.6TB of the disk. It then allowed me to resize the partitions, which I did. Now that windows is installed I have encountered a problem. The computer does not recognise the remainder of the disk, nor can I see it in windows explorer. It is also not in My Computer. It does however show up in Disk Management as 5.6TB. How can I install windows 7 onto the remaining 3.4TB? I have found similar posts to this one on this forum, but they all seem to be outdated. I have run into this problem before, and the fix was to use the Windows 7 installation media and choose "Repair your computer". This will check the disk, and if it finds bad sectors, it will try to fix them. It is really important to do this with the installation media, as it won't work otherwise. The low-lying barrio of Bella Vista, which is on the western edge of Caracas, is a microcosm of the country's socioeconomic woes. It is densely populated, overcrowded and riddled with crime, and the government has imposed strict regulations to prevent people from leaving the area. In recent years, the problems have only worsened. In the past few years, the Venezuelan government has seized more than a dozen businesses from their owners, including a brewery, a cafe and an ice-cream shop. In the past year, authorities have arrested dozens of people in the area, including small-business owners, and more than 20 people have died in violent protests in the area. "People in Venezuela are dying because they don't have food," said a lawyer who works in the area. "We need help," he said, adding that the government was letting the city fall into ruin. The government responded to the protests by taking control of businesses. But the situation has only worsened. "If the government is going to take over our businesses, then it's better that it does so in a democratic manner," said the lawyer, who declined to be named because he was afraid of reprisals from the government. "We don't need to be under the boot of Maduro." The government has not said how it plans to run businesses. But people in the area say it is unlikely that the businesses will be run by the 82157476af
